WHITHER?

Rabbi Maurice N. Eisendrath

That Judaism is in the midst of a mighty, surging ferment is to be discerned on every hand. From the far Western Pacific coast comes the news that Rabbi Herman Lissauer has resigned his pulpit at Temple Emanu-El, a Reform synagogue in Los Angeles, because, in his opinion,. even Liberal Judaism has not kept step with modern scientific advance. From the Eastern Atlantic coast arrives the word that Rabbi Louis J. Schwefel, of the Adath Israel Congregation, the largest and one of the oldest Orthodox Congregations in Washington had likewise abandoned his post because, in his judgment, the synagogue in America has no future unless it institute progressive reforms. Like the burning words of Jeremiah thundered forth at the holy Temple at Jerusalem in the midst of the festive crowd that had sought its portals, Rabbi Schwefel's trenchant statements, uttered on the Sacred Kippur Eve, created much of a sensation in Washington's orthodox circles. Prefacing his remarks with an assurance that he was speaking without malice in his heart, he boldly challenged his hearers: "We can have no future unless we are willing to sacrifice something for our youth." While over three thousand miles away, across the entire breadth of a mighty continent, Rabbi Lissauer, reacting to an altogether different environment and training, in sweeping and breath-taking syllables scored the synagogue, orthodox, conservative, and reform, for its failure to secure the support of the educated and cultured, for its stubborn resistance still to the broadening dawn of the scientific era, for its obstreperous persistence in seeking to conserve the old in preference to the new, for its refusal to build upon the basis of modern thought and our revised world view a rational and thoroughly vital Judaism. The climax of his address, also spoken as words of farewell to the congregation he was leaving, must have burned themselves into the minds of his audience. "It seems nowadays," he said, "That a Rabbi may speak the truth only insofar as the mortgage on his temple permits, . . . as for me, I would rather preach the truth in a modest synagogue than be forced to compromise with it in an imposing, but financially overburdened, structure." Continuing in a strain strangely similar to that of Rabbi Schwefel, he concluded. "The synagogue of the future will rest upon the young. It will be built by and for the generation of young people who have been reared against a scientific background, else it will not be built at all. It must revise its conceptions, grow with the growth of knowledge, and cause its ritual to reflect the highest thought of mankind in the most convincing way. As has been said, "I had rather fall under my burden in the dust at the foot of the ladder, leaning against the unfinished Temple of the future, than to rule, the proudest of monarchs, in a kingdom that is to pass away."

There is much of significance and foreboding in these rumblings which reach us from the remote Eastern and Western coasts, from the ranks of widely variant Orthodoxy and Reform. There is much of truth in these sincere and honest criticisms of the synagogue. The deadly influence of the past does too frequently weigh us down and hamper our forward march. While mere conservatism, mere appreciation of the richly beautiful values of yore, a mere love for that which is hallowed by the past is not evil in itself, still when the gaze is rivetted solely on the days that are gone and when, like Lot's wife, we look constantly behind, disaster lies ahead mayhap we might fall into the yawning abyss. The virtue then of a sane and moderate conservatism becomes the vice of a stagnant and stifled reactionism. Surely such an attitude cannot hope to survive in a scientific and constantly changing world.

Judaism is thus being challenged, not merely by the stream of modern thought without, but by its thinking adherents within; it is being called into question not merely by its enlightened laity but by its more frankly honest leaders as well. What to do? Whither to go? These are the importunate queries which our generation of Jews must speedily, but sanely and scientifically, courageously and rationally, answer. Both Orthodoxy and Reform must forsake "their low vaulted past . . . build them more stately mansions for their souls, leaving their outgrown shells by life's unresting sea."

Children orphaned through the recent massacres in Palestine are placing an additional responsibility, which must be met upon Hadassah, Miss Frances Lesser, of Boston, national president of the American Junior Hadassah, stated in an address before the Montreal Junior Hadassah in the Windsor Hotel Monday evening. This was the first meeting of the newly reorganized Montreal Junior Hadassah, which now comprises in a single unity all the former small local Hadassah groups. Miss Lesser, who arrived in Jerusalem for a visit the day before the big massacre began, told of the horrible things she had seen there, and of the work the Hadassah had done in helping to obtain protection for the children's village and in supplying refugees with food, clothing and medical assistance.

Mrs. M. Bernblum, president of the local organization, who occupied the chair, stated that the special work of the Junior Hadassah of the Dominion was to raise $6,000 for the creche in Palestine. Of this sum $3,000 has been allocated to Montreal.

Corporation News

BRAZILIAN TRACTION

Categorial denial that there had been or are in prospect any negotiations for the purchase of Brazilian Traction control by any corporation or financial groups was given in a statement by President Miller Lash, K. C., upon his return last week from a visit to Brazil and Europe.

While admitting that economic conditions in Brazil at the moment left something to be desired, President Lash states that operations of the company had not been affected in any degree thereby. He admitted, however, that while earnings continue to expand, they would show more rapid growth under more auspicious business conditions in the country.

CANADIAN CAR & FOUNDRY

Contrary to general expectations, directors of Canadian Car & Foundry Co. Limited, at their meeting this week, declared the dividend on the new common stock at the same rate as has been paid on the old (7 per cent) with a declaration of 44 cents on the basis of $1.75 annually.

It was announced that the annual report of the company, which will be published in a week or two, will show earnings at a high rate for all time. Business for the year aggregated around $40,000,000.

In connection with the failure to increase the rate of dividend on the common, it is pointed out — unofficially — that this could not be done before the dividend on the preferred stock had been increased, and that declaration of the senior dividend is not due for another month yet.

GENERAL STEEL WARES

It is stated by a high official of General Steel Wares, Ltd., who has just returned from a trip through Western Canada, that sales of the company have been well in excess of last year, and that operations at the big new enamelling plant at London, Ont. — the largest in the world, is already having a marked effect upon earnings.

It is intimated that earnings of General Steel Wares, which were equal to $1.21 on the common in 1928, will work out at around $2.20 a share for the current year.

FAMOUS PLAYERS

The annual statement of Famous Players Canadian Corporation which is expected to appear about the end of this month will make satisfactory reading. Official reports on profits in the first nine months of the period ended August 31st, indicated that close to $5.00 per share on the common might be expected.

Allowances must be made for extraordinary write offs, which are customary during periods when a company does especially well. Famous Players evidently has attained its stride as a big earner.

BROMPTON PULP & PAPER

The outcome of the changes made in the products of the Brompton Pulp & Paper Company justifies the policy of the directors. The mills of the company no longer depend on newsprint exclusively for a revenue. More than a third of the production revenue during the past year has been from book papers, kraft paper and wood pulp sulphite. As a result of this there are good prospects that the company will make a better showing for the current fiscal year.

CANADIAN BREWING

It is stated authoritatively that sales and earnings of the Canadian Brewing Corporation have increased this year. As a result profits will be in excess of dividend requirements and the $2. per share rate will be maintained.

PENMANS LIMITED

With all plants operating at or close to full capacity, business of Penmans Ltd. for the first 3 quarters of the current year has been running on a higher basis than last year. Due to market conditions, however, earnings may not be much improved, but should approximate the 1928 figure of over $6.50 a share.

Leading Bankers See No Danger To Economic Structure In Market Break

IN a period when stock market values are undergoing so rapid and drastic a revision downward, it is natural that attention should turn in the direction of business conditions, with a searching for some change that would account for the break, other than the natural readjustment of an overdone speculation and an attendant inflation in the stock markets. A review of the Canadian situation, however, would indicate that our markets are suffering almost entirely from a repercussion from the debacle in Wall Street, and leading Canadian bankers in commenting on the situation were all at one in emphasizing that Canadian conditions were on a sound basis, and that the stock market situation must not be considered as reflecting any change in fundamental conditions.

The one fly in the Canadian economic situation at the present time is the wheat situation, and M. W. Wilson, general manager of The Royal Bank of Canada, stated that undue importance should not be attached to this condition, adding that exports are steadily taking place, and that the situation was not one that need cause serious apprehension. The same view was also expressed by Sir Charles Gordon, president of Bank of Montreal.

H. B. Mackenzie, general manager of the Bank of Montreal, in commenting on the current market break, stated that the normal business of the country was going on quite independently of the stock market situation and that general conditions in the country are fundamentally sound. Mr. Mackenzie continued to say that the readjustment of stock market prices, while causing loss to many individuals, has not, so far as the bank is aware, caused any further serious trouble, as brokers' loans were well margined. Mr. Mackenzie also pointed out that the selling in New York, notwithstanding the decline, was of an orderly character.

Mining & Oil

NORANDA MINES

Word from New York city tells of the formation of a new $40,000,000 company, in which Noranda officials are interested. The name of the new enterprise is the International Mining Corporation and its purposes are to finance promising prospects and carry them through to completion and also to operate as a mining investment trust.

The operations of the company will not be confined to Canada but will be world wide in scope. To date, it is said the new company has five Canadian mines in mind which it may assist and also one in South Africa.

INTERNATIONAL NICKEL

International Nickel Company has supplanted Granby Consolidated Mining and Smelting Co. as the premier producer of copper in Canada. For many years Granby has headed the list of Canadian producers stepped up output until last year it produced 57,000,000 pounds. This year the company should do slightly better than 60,000,000 pounds.

Due to the greatly increased output of the nickel copper mines of International Nickel Co., production of copper in the first half of the year 1929 amounted to 34,000,000 pounds, and it is estimated that production for the second half will be 50,000,000 pounds, making an indicated total for the year of 84,000,000 pounds. Noranda and Granby are running about on even terms this year, but the final count for the year is likely to show that Noranda stands second and Granby third in the list of Canadian copper mines.

FROM A TRAVELER'S NOTE BOOK

I shall pen from week to week some of the experiences I had on my recent tour to Europe and Palestine. I hope these prove interesting.

The ocean journey "democratizes". Somehow the common perils facing men on high seas make commoners out of all! One need only have a smile and he makes friends. Fellowship is much easier on sea than on land.

Thus it was an easy matter to have become a comrade of Father Pari, an eminent Catholic Church leader of Montreal who had with him on the "Ausonia" a group of students bound for a pilgrimage to Rome. My own group of "boys" of Temple Emanu-El allied itself with the group of this beloved leader of Catholicism. So strong did our friendship grow that it resulted in an open formal fellowship meeting held on board. This meeting between Catholics, Protestants and Jews will long linger in the memory of all who participated. Father Pari's stirring address on the need of better understanding between the follower's of all faiths made a deep impression. Professor Diserens, of the University of Cincinnati, spoke on behalf of the Protestants. I had "the say" concerning the aims of Israel for world-brotherhood. It was a unique gathering on the high-seas. The very waves seemed to have chanted the Psalmists words—"How beautiful and pleasant it is when brethren 'travel' together."

IN THE CAUSE OF TORAH

The Temple Emanu-El College of Jewish Studies opened last Monday evening. It was a grand sight to observe the large number of students who have come to study Jewish thought and culture. What I like about the school is its emphasis on freedom of thought. On its faculty are men of various shades of opinion pertaining to the interpretation of Jewish life. There are Yiddishists and Hebraists, Reform and Conservative Jews. We want these opinions to meet. In the search of truth—one must not be dogmatic. And in obtaining of Jewish truth—one must especially cultivate the religion of the open mind.

JAMES WISE

Montreal had a representative visitor during the past week in the person of James Waterman Wise. I was not privileged to have heard him speak. Rabbinical duties kept me from attending the various meetings which Mr. Wise addressed. However, we did spend a dinner hour together. I learned then to admire James. He is one of the leaders in the Jewish youth movement—if such a movement does actually exist. I personally am glad that the son of our beloved Stephen Wise is identified with Jewish work—such as Avukah. So many sons of Rabbis go and work and plant in strange vineyards! . . . not so the case with James, son of Rabbi Wise.

BRINGING THE JEW TO THE SYNAGOGUE

Roger N. Straus, President of the National Federation of Temple Brotherhoods, is leading a campaign in New York City to bring the unaffiliated Jews into the Temples. What a splendid undertaking'. Too much effort, during recent years, has been devoted by American Jews in having Jews brought into federations for the support of charities, but little time has been given towards the increasing affiliations with the greatest institution—the Synagogue. Our federations toward the promotion of charities are good in themselves, but fail if they do not receive the inspirations of Synagogual life.

What a shame that so many Jews for Rosh Hashanah and Yom Kippur have to go and "buy tickets" to have a seat in the Synagogue! Certainly these constitute spiritual beggars. Such must realize that unless they support the Synagogue during the entire year—there will be no Temple for them on the holydays.

Spiritually poor is that Jew who does not find it convenient to help the Synagogue at all times.

A Good Jew is affiliated with a Synagogue or Temple.

ABANA MINES

Fred A. Kent, president of Abana Mines, Limited, declares Abana, minewise, was never in better condition, in a statement issued with the general manager's report for the period from October 1st to 15th. On October 16th the crosscut on the 550 foot level cut into the ore shoot. Work has been carried out here continuously since that time with the 30 feet of ore having been opened up to date.

As soon as general manager Celement has finished his crosscuts and has his assays completed, we will issue a further statement, but pending this, it is sufficient for us to say that the ore bodies on the 425 and 550 levels are wider and richer, and have the appearance of extending in length.

KIRKLAND LAKE GOLD

Confirmation of the report on the Street that Kirkland Lake Gold had struck rich ore in drilling from the 3600 feet level has been secured from the president D. B. Hanna and managing director, J. B. Tyrrell. Assay results were not available but when asked as to the figures mentioned on the Street, Mr. Tyrrell remarked "We have done better than that, the rich ore was cut in the first hole to be put down from the 3.600 foot level, and was cut about 200 feet below the level." Mr. Hanna stated that the drive to the west on the 3.600 foot level was quite encouraging. At the present time the face is in good milling ore, running about $10 a ton.

A. P. CONSOLIDATED

The deal between A. P. Con. and Canadian Exploration Company was responsible it is believed for the big break in A. P. Con stock and brokers declared that it represented the exchange of nearly $1,500,000, of the company's assets for a half interest in 50,000 acres of wildcat lands of which there might be no oil.

This view, however, brought from A. G. Clarke, managing director of A.P. Consolidated, the retort that the lands were in no sense of the wildcat variety and that the deal was the best he could possibly have made. Mr. Clarke said that he had been trying to close for the lands just acquired for three years and that on the strength of the transaction there had been an important transfer of shares to New York. The new oil land being acquired had been sponsored, he said, by Fisher & Lowrie of Denver, Col. recognized as one of the highest authorities on oil properties in the United States.

Society Presents Wise

James Waterman Wise, of New York, son of Rabbi Stephen Wise and author of "Jews are Like That" spoke on "The Revolt of Jewish Youth" at the Mount Royal Hotel Sunday, October 27, at 3 p.m., under the auspices of the Jewish Literary and Historical Society of Canada. Hyman Edelstein, president, introduced the speaker and led a discussion in which A. Klein and Harvey Golden participated. The Jewish Literary and Historical Society of Canada was inaugurated at a banquet at the Mount Royal Hotel February 4, by Louis Golding, Anglo-Jewish author, who lectured on "Creative Art in Jewish Life." Officers are: Hyman Edelstein, president; A. Klein and J. K. Mergler, vice-presidents; Alexander I. Popliger, registrar and treasurer; I. Ballon, Harvey Golden, Rabbi Harry J. Stern, J. Simand, A. Klein, B. Figler and Hyman Edelstein, executive committee.

Enunciating the three indictments by Jewish youth against creed, dogma and ceremonial as a challenge against outworn customs, social deadness and retrogression rather than progression in the moral world, Mr. Wise declared that there was a fundamental trend and impulse in Jewish life and thought towards a self-realization. Despite the advances made in the realms of science and art, he continued, youth is disturbed at the immovability of religion. It views with disapproval the tendency of the church and the synagogue to lay down dogmas concerning God and the question of life after death in the same stereotyped fashion as centuries ago. The principle of dissection of religion as practised and applied to everyday life today by the authorities meets with youth's disfavor. To make matters worse there is the tendency to regard youth with a disdain that towers above discussion, instead of nursing individuality for the furtherance of self-confidence.

Youth demands an experimental attitude in regard to dogma and belief, and continues to seek for truth, knowing meanwhile that there is no such thing as absolute truth in these matters.

Dealing with the second indictment of youth in its revolt against established customs, Mr. Wise said that the social side of religion was one of the strongest counts. The question is raised: "What part are religious institutions playing in the social struggles?" The teachings of the Bible involve the principles of social right, he maintained, but both churches and synagogues fell down in the practical application of their texts. Both church and synagogue failed in the hour of testing, when war was not averted, hands were tied, lips were dumb, and the sword advocated as the best weapon for world-wide arbitration. Until youth feels that the church and the synagogue carry out to the letter their preachings, he declared, they need not expect their faith and respect of integrity of spirit. "What sort of religion is it that expects to hold loyalty and interest, if it hasn't the courage to speak out what it knows? Let it blaze and lead the way, and religious organizations will find a whole-hearted co-operation on the part of the youth in the world."

Young folks today are in spiritual and intellectual conflicts, Mr. Wise said, "What help do they get from religious institutions?" They are told to know their Ten Commandments or the Sermon on the Mount and apply the knowledge to their everyday lives as a means of solving their problems. Youth feels that it requires a more tangible inner understanding of its requirements. Jesus and Moses did not rely on the teachings of the past to create a lasting impression, he stated. They looked ahead of the times, and provided for the future. The third indictment deals with the whole theory of life, morality, and living, and the attitude of youth is, "If you (religious institutions) cannot aid us to find truth, we shall seek it for ourselves. The beauty and holiness of religion will continue to lose its power until such a time as it can see through the heart and eyes of an expectant youth that seeks truths rather than substitutes. At the present time religion is incapable of meeting the justified needs of the times."

Dealing with the breaking down of the ghetto walls at the end of the eighteenth century, Mr. Wise said that the inevitable result was the tendency of Jews to show that there was no difference between them and their contemporaries outside of religious beliefs. There was a pathetic self-deception practised in so doing that did not fool anyone else but themselves. The Jewish youth of today feels that denial of inherent ability cannot bring inner peace and better understanding. The yearning for Jewish content in life, a magnetic quality, draws them to their background and heritage. Jewish youth claims its identity, wants to build upon and ennoble it. Palestine, he continued, is not only a home for Jews, or a Jewish adventure in agricultural pursuits, but is the centre of a renaissance of Jewish cultural and intellectual life, an example of the revolt of Jewish spirit. "The quest for truth is written on the hearts of our youth," he declared, "but we need have no fear that they are straying from the tenets of their religion even if the devious ways they follow in their search for truth are perhaps the least bit incomprehensible to the older generation."

The schools were established 15 years ago and in celebration of the anniversary a volume is being published. A banquet was held in the Mount Royal Hotel Sunday, October 20, when the guest speaker was Dr. Jehudah Kaufman of Tel-Aviv, Palestine, well-known author and scholar. Joint chairmen are H. M. Caiserman and Hyman Decklebaum; Z. Wolofsky and A. Yancovitch are vice-chairmen; I. Cohen is treasurer; M. Dickstein, manager; and Eliezer Greenberg, secretary.

Belgian Socialist Sees Zionism Safe

Confident that the spirit of the Palestine mandate providing for a national Jewish homeland will be respected by the Labor Government of Great Britain, irrespective of the recent disorders, was expressed by Louis Pierard, Socialist member of the Belgian Parliament, who is in Washington in charge of the Belgian art exhibit recently opened at the Corcoran Gallery. M. Pierard is co-secretary of the Pro-Palestine committee, created during the meeting of the Socialist Second Internationale at Brussels last year, and lectured last year at the Institute of Politics in Williamstown, Mass.

"I am sure that in any case the spirit of the mandate will be respected by the Labor Government," he declared. "The statement made by Lord Passfield, Colonial Minister, and the plain statements of Prime Minister MacDonald and his Foreign Minister, Arthur Henderson, before the League of Nations in Geneva, are proof that confidence in the policy of the Labor Cabinet toward Zionist Palestine can be had. Moreover, the British Labor party has always displayed the greatest sympathy toward the Zionist movement."

Surprise was expressed by Mr. Pierard that in some of the discussions arising out of the Palestine disorders allegations have been made that the project of the national Jewish homeland is an injustice against the Arab population.

"The purpose of the mandate was not only to guarantee the establishment of the Jewish homeland but likewise to assure equality of treatment of all inhabitants of the country, regardless of race or religion," he said. "The Jews, though at present a minority, possess claims to Palestine which cannot be ignored, and which in fact were recognized by the representative of the Arab people at the peace conference, the Emir Fiesal. Palestine cannot be treated as a mere Arab territory, for Christians as well as Jews are interested in the establishment of a satisfactory administration of the Holy Land.

"The Arabs contend that certain promises were made to the Sherif Hussein in 1915 in connection with the creation of an Arab State following the war. Arab agitators primarily responsible for inciting the recent disorders maintained that Palestine was included in these promises, but Britain has formally and emphatically denied this, declaring to the contrary that Palestine was expressly excluded. In any case, in 1917 the Balfour declaration was issued by the British Government, and with respect to Palestine we know that only this pledge, made to the Zionists, has been embodied in the treaty, and hence it is this pledge which must be fulfilled.

"Liberals have special reason to sympathize with the Zionists, aside from the need of the Jews for a homeland. I refer to the course the Zionist experiment has followed. The Zionist ideal is to create in Palestine a homeland based on social justice, as opposed to its becoming a purely capitalistic country. This has taken concrete form in the communal colonies and the cooperatives. I am firmly convinced that such a Jewish national centre, based on high social ideals, will accelerate universal brotherhood and an improved order of society.

"For these very reasons, such eminent Socialists as Ramsay MacDonald and Emile Vandervelde of Belgium have so warmly supported the Zionist movement after their visits to Palestine. They realize the significance of Zionism in its general social implications."

In discussing the recent disorders M. Pierard expressed the opinion that economic reasons had influenced the Arab agitators perhaps more than the political claims which they put forward.

"We must not overlook the fact," he said, "that most of the land in Palestine has been owned by the big Arab landowners, the effendi. These effendi for the most part permitted the land to lie in an uncultivated and arid condition. A great deal of it has been purchased by the Jewish national fund. This land is now beautifully cultivated, and the effendi, deprived of their former property, in spite of the fact that it was purchased from them for many times its true value, envy the Jews and try to excite the ignorant and fanatical Arab masses against them.

"Another important factor is the raising of the standard of living of the Arab peasants by the Jewish colonists. These peasants were formerly exploited by the effendi, and the latter naturally fear complete loss of their power as a result of the introduction of Western ideas of economic and social freedom by the Jewish workers. Between the Jews and the peasants themselves very cordial relations have for the most part existed, and I observed many instances of this during my visit in Palestine in 1927.

"If left alone and not incited by false tales of the agitators, these relations would become increasingly friendly, for the natives are continually aware of their debt to the Jews for the great increase of prosperity, modern ideas of sanitation and health, public works and the general progress of what was before a sadly neglected and backward country. All that the Zionists have taken away from the Arabs are the swamps, malaria and poor roads which formerly characterized Palestine.

"My sincerest hope is that in spite of the bitterness aroused by the horrors of recent events a sort of compromise will be reached between the Jewish population and the Arab natives. Such a compromise and rapprochement between the Jews and the Arabs is an essential condition of peace in the Near East."

Arabs Declare War on Balfour Policy

Eight hundred Arabs representing Palestine, Transjordania, Syria, Iraq and Egypt are assembled at Jerusalem, Oct. 27, for the all-Arab congress called for the purpose of formulating a national Arab policy on Palestine voiced their protest against the Balfour declaration and the British Zionist policy.

Many resolutions were adopted, and among them was a decision to send a delegation to the British Inquiry Commission now in the country to inform the members that Palestine cannot have peace until the Balfour declaration is abolished. A telegram sent to the Colonial Office expresses lack of confidence in the High Commissioner and declares that he initiated an unstatesmanlike policy to favor the Jews against the Arabs.

Other decisions were to demand that the national Parliamentary Government refuse to pay taxes without representation. A special committee was appointed to herald the latter plan throughout the country.

At the close of the session the entire congress stood up and took oath to boycott all merchandise of the Jews and to make every effort to compel other Arabs to do the same.

The Arab congress further decided to ask the government to withdraw the recent new Wailing Wall regulations. If the government fails to do so, the Arabs assert that they themselves will remove the articles placed there by the Jews with the consent of the Government. The Arabs hold that the government will be responsible for any consequences.

It was decided that for the time being the inquiry commission should not be boycotted, a final decision in this matter being left to four councils of Arab executives.

A resolution adopted protests against and demands the repeal of the collective punishments ordinance, which imposes fines on villages found guilty of attacks on Jews. Other resolutions demanded the dismissal of Norman Bentwich, Attorney General, because he is a Jew and a Zionist.

Other demands are for the suspension of Jewish immigration, the withholding of land from sale to Jews and the support of Arab merchants and industries. The Arabs would sell the Jews everything except land and buy nothing from them. They also decided to declare a general strike throughout the country Nov. 2, the Balfour Declaration day.

The Arab boycott against the Jews is becoming graver daily. Throughout the cities and the country Arab pickets are watching to prevent Arabs from going into Jews' stores, and if any Arab enters a Jew's store and buys something, pickets fall upon him as he is going out, destroy the merchandise and then force him to return to the store and ask the Jew for his money back.

A typical case occurred in Jerusalem late this afternoon when an Arab entered a Jewish glassware store and bought a porcelain pitcher. Upon leaving he was met by two Arab pickets who smashed the pitcher and forced him to return to the store and demand the return of his money. When the Jewish shopkeeper refused to give the money, the Arab went out and told the pickets, whereupon a picket smashed the show windows of the store.

A crowd immediately assembled and a fight ensued, in which the shopkeeper was stabbed in the neck. Arab policemen standing near by looked on and failed to interfere, but two British policemen soon appeared and arrested two Arabs.

Moslem Propaganda Stresses Wailing Wall Rights

At Jerusalem, October 22, almost on the eve of the arrival of the British inquiry commision, the situation in Palestine was more critical than for many weeks past. Arab propaganda is spreading and constantly gaining a firmer foothold. The population of Nablus is incensed against the government because of the flogging of school boys by the British assistant director of education for refusing to attend school last Wednesday, the day of the Arab general strike. The Arab school children of Jerusalem, in sympathy with their Nablus schoolmates, also went on strike, agitators raiding the schools and actually pulling pupils out of the classrooms, while in many places Arab policemen stood by taking no action.

In Haifa and Safed anti-government feeling is strong because of the death sentence imposed upon three Arabs for the murder of a Safed Jew. The Arabs in Safed sent a cable to King George asking amnesty for the three men convicted.

However, with Jerusalem as a starting point, the strongest weapon being employed by the Arab leaders is the alleged deprival of their rights at the Wailing Wall and the violation of the statues quo there. With this they have gained the sympathy not only of their brethren throughout Palestine but in all the neighboring countries as well. In Transjordania anti-British and anti-Jewish feeling is particularly strong because it was reported that Moslems were being deprived of their rights at the Wailing Wall. Protest demonstrations were held and messages of sympathy sent to the Arab Executive in Palestine expressing willingness to help in any manner necessary.

During the past few months since the Wailing Wall problem came so much to the fore and the question of the status quo has been constantly arising, the Jews have evidenced a stronger desire than ever to pray there and especially to hold regular services. Therefore, as each Jewish holiday approaches, new disputes have arisen to be settled by the government as to just what ceremonies and rituals are to be permitted at the wall. No matter what regulations the government makes in this respect, both the Arabs and the Jews are dissatisfied, the former claiming a violation of the status quo and asserting their rights are being taken from them and the latter maintaining they are being deprived of their ordinary rights of prayer and have no desire to violate the status quo.

It has been suggested by responsible Jewish leaders here that until the special commission arrives to determine the exact rights of the Arabs and Jews at the Wailing Wall, all Jews should keep away from there entirely, thereby not subjecting themselves to humiliation because they are not permitted to pursue the ordinary course of prayer and at the same time not giving the Arabs the opportunity to use the alleged denial of their rights at the wall as propaganda to win the sympathy of Moslems throughout the world.

It is authoritatively learned that the inquiry commission meetings are to be behind closed doors, counsel only being admitted.

Zionist Executive Fails to Cope With Palestine Relief Problem

After the chaotic condition that has existed for more than six weeks in emergency relief work in Palestine, the problem has been officially taken over by the Vaad Leumi, the Jewish National Council, which is headed by Pinchas Rutenberg, who founded the Palestine Hydroelectric Corporation.

Although ample funds began pouring in from all parts of the world almost immediately after the troubles began, nevertheless a condition of chaos existed even six weeks after the time many Jews had been forced to flee their homes. To the Palestine Zionist Executive in Jerusalem was assigned the task of administering the relief work and all funds were sent to it. Unfortunately, however, the state of affairs existing at the refugee shelters clearly showed that this group was entirely incapable of coping with the situation.

Complaints were heard on all sides: mostly because those in charge did not know how to deal with the local population. They seemed to consider all refugees in the class of beggars, and although it is true that some beggars crept in among the thousand refugees, nevertheless they constituted an insignificant minority and did not justify the treatment of others who had previously lived comfortably in independence as though they were of the same class.

A committee had been organized representing the local residents to assist the relief work, but it was allowed to act in an advisory capacity only, and all its members soon resigned, finding it impossible to agree with this unsympathetic attitude.

With four or five families huddled in one room, sitting, eating and sleeping on stone floors, the refugees were forced to live in miserable conditions since the day they fled from their homes. For about four weeks the government supplied them with food and that was the most human treatment they received. When the government ceased to furnish these rations, because it declared it was safe for the refugees to return home, most of the latter, particularly those living in Arab quarters, refused because they were still afraid and maintained the police protection was inadequate.

At this juncture the Zionist Executive, which was in charge of the relief funds, took up the task of feeding the refugees. Whereas the government rations had consisted of meat, vegetables, bread, milk, dry products, &c., the food supplied by the Zionists consisted only of a half-loaf of bread and a half-tin of sardines a person daily. To small children there was allowed one cup of milk in addition. On several occasions even these meager rations were withheld and cards were handed out entitling the refugees to obtain food at soup kitchens almost two miles distant, this being done in an effort to compel them to return to their homes in neighborhoods which they still considered unsafe. They declared they would rather starve than go back.

This headline of a news item which appeared recently in Jerusalem's Hebrew daily best describes conditions: "Scandal of refugees — Jerusalem's relief committee starving refugees — either they must return to dangerous quarters or starve — the attitude toward the refugees is the same as toward beggars."

A later issue of this paper contains a letter to the editor from two refugees which reads:

"Since the beginning of the riots nearly two months ago about 200 of us have been sheltered in the Mizrachi Talmud Torah building, rolling about in cellars, children, women and men altogether, all of whom have been broken up as a result of the bloody days. In addition to this we are now starving.

"Yesterday they even stopped giving us the miserable help we previously received, namely, bread and sardines. Yesterday afternoon the screaming of the starved reached the skies. Children who begged for bread were slapped by their mothers to quiet them. Luckily for us came an unexpected visit of four American Jewish tourists whose names are unknown to us and who, when they saw our terrible condition, brought us forty loaves of bread and many boxes of sardines, which were divided among 200 persons, thus keeping us from starving.

"We ask all Jewry, where is justice, where is righteousness and where are our relief committees? Is this the way they rejoin — forcing us to return to the Old City and other dangerous quarters? Who will care for us tomorrow after we return? Where is the public? Will it hear our voice?

"On behalf of the refugees sheltered at the Mizrachi Talmud Torah,
"JUDAH COHEN AND NISSIM NACHMAIS."

Fortunately for these sufferers the emergency relief committee in the United States, headed by David Brown, decided to send Mr. and Mrs. Jonah Goldstein of New York, both experienced communal workers, to assist in solving the relief problem here. They arrived just at the opportune moment. After deliberation and consultations with the Zionist executive and local representatives, it was decided upon the Goldstein's recommendation that the situation could best be handled by the Vaad Leumi, which is officially recognized as the organization of Palestine Jewry.

Since the Vaad Leumi took over the work an efficient organization has been set up, thanks to the marked executive ability of Pinchas Rutenberg and marked improvement has already been noticed in the last few days, to the satisfaction of the refugees. Mr. Rutenberg, who had hitherto devoted his entire time to the hydroelectric project and abstained from communal activities, consented to become the chairman of the Jewish National Council when he realized the seriousness of affairs since the recent disturbances. Palestine Jewry places great confidence in his administrative ability.

Despite the faults of the other bodies, much credit is due to the Hadassah medical organization for its work from the very beginning of the disturbances. It was the first on hand to render medical treatment wherever wounded were found and it handled the problem of feeding the refugees most efficiently during the weeks before they were taken over by the government.

A democratized synagogue has been organized in New York City to appeal to the Jewish youth. Under the supervision of Rabbi Marius Ranson, former assistant rabbi of Temple Beth-El, it is known as the American Synagogue of New York and is backed by people prominent in many spheres. Freedom of the pew will permit members of the congregation to discuss in open forum at all services whatever topic is chosen by the rabbi. Freedom to question, to debate and to think will be the principle upon which the synagogue will operate. Rabbi Ranson believes that, because the preacher under the existing system offends the young by demanding that they accept arbitrarily everything spoken from the pulpit, the old-fashioned sermon must go. He regards it as a relic of the age of ignorance, autocracy and dogmatism. He claims that the synagogue must keep step with the democracy which has entered into modern psychology and modern pedagogy in order to retain the respect of modern youth.

This effort to establish a synagogue which will interest the Jewish youth is one of the very few efforts discernible. The Jewish youth as an individual is anything but suppressed. If he is cheated it is that he is cheated out of plain bread but not out of cake. He is often objectionable because he is pompous, conceited, self-opinionated and overly self-assertive. No one can say that Jewish parents do not do everything in their power to spoil their children. But when these children have grown to young manhood and young womanhood their opinions are dismissed and they themselves are reminded that, after all, they have had no experience and therefore know nothing and are too young, anyway.

So, the Jewish youth taken on the whole is inadequately regarded if a purpose in view is the preservation of these young people for Judaism and Jewish communal service. Youth is neglected in general counsels and its opinions discarded with contempt or hardly listened to. Jewish elders cling to the idea that a man or woman must be up in years before his or her judgment is worth much. They also hold the belief that because a man is up in years he naturally has judgment and his advice should be harkened to. Of course, both these ideas are fallacious. Experience is useless in some people. They never learn and never have wisdom to pass on to others. A stupid young man's judgment is just as bad as a stupid, old man's judgment and the judgment of a wise old man is no better than the judgment of a wise young man. If a young fool is dangerous and gets in the way, is there any fool like an old one? And still the more a man resembles a patriarch in white hair and venerable aspect the more respect Jewry will accord him. He may be half-baked, unable to learn by experience and a man who has failed in contact with the world but may still profit from the fact that his hair turned gray early and that his physical appearance somehow gives weight to his expressed ideas in communal affairs. If in addition to his gift for appearing patriarchal the Jewish elder is rich even his words are worth their weight in gold. Unless he loses his money he remains worthy, wise, intelligent, thoughtful, a man of ripe judgment and a prince in Israel. In an age which glorifies youth in other communities, the Jewish community sticks to the idea that the progress of years over a man is enough to bring him awed attention.

This Jewish worship of the patriarch is at the very root of the lack of young leadership in Jewish communal life. A man of forty is considered a young leader. There ought to be more leaders of twenty-five. A man of sixty is not too old to be president but neither is a man of twenty-eight too young. Every time an organization re-elects the same officers that it has been re-electing for the past five years it is a slap in the face of youth. It is a way of telling the young folks that between the time some of them aged from twenty to twenty-five no one has been brought up in leadership competent to mingle with older communal leaders.

If the self-assurance of young blood is sometimes over-whelming it is no more so than the vanity and tenacity of the middle-aged. If the indifference of young men to communal welfare seems colossal there is a good reason for it. The only way to cope with this indifference is to make plans against it long in advance. If leaders can really be made they cannot be made at a moment's notice. The process is begun when youth is taken into the confidence of its elders, at an early age, when its dignity is respected, when its understanding is highly evaluated and when its enthusiasm is regarded for the priceless quality it is. Leadership can not be inspired as long as the young are excluded from a share in communal duty and as long as they are treated on age instead of ability.

Finds Jews Abroad Still in Dire Need

The only hope of the Jews of Russia and Poland, where there is "still terrible suffering," is industrialization and agriculture, according to Dr. Henry Moskowitz, chairman of the executive committee of the American Ort and the Ort Reconstruction Fund. Dr. Moskowitz has just returned from Europe, where he attended a meeting of the Ort International Conference at Berlin in August, and in an interview after the meeting he described the serious conditions mentioned in the reports of the Russian and Polish delegates there. The middleman is going in Poland, and in Russia he is gone, he said, and told of how the Jews in these countries had always been forced out of every occupation except trade, and now are being driven out of that and told to become producers. In Russia, he said, the Jews have been unable to buy bread from the cooperative, regardless of being able to pay for it, and have been forced to "bootleg" the necessities of life until they became artizans or farmers.

The American Ort, he said, sent $300,000 worth of machinery to Jews in these countries in eight months of last year and maintains forty trade schools in Poland to teach the operation of the machines. There are 1,000,000 Jews in Russia alone, he asserted, who were wealthy traders and are now on the brink of starvation. He said that $20,000,000 a year is sent from hard-working Jews in this country to relatives in these countries.

Mark Eisner, chairman of the New York Committee of the Ort Reconstruction Campaign and former Collector of Internal Revenue, described the workings of the Ort's revolving fund, by which much of the money loaned for the purchase of machinery is being returned for the help of other deserving cases. He said that it is estimated that of the 1,000 machines purchased in the past year each supports five persons.

Canadian Zionist News

At a meeting held of the National Council of the Zionist Organization of Canada, A. J. Freiman, pres., was chairman. It was decided that the 22nd. convention would take place in Montreal, January 5th., 1930, in Montreal. November 2nd., the 12th aniversary of the Balfour Declaration, will be celebrated by Zionist Societies. Work of securing funds through the United Palestine Appeal, for construction in Palestine, will commence throughout the Dominion. The organization is in debt to the Canadian banks over one-quarter of a million dollars, of which $125,000 must be paid off before January 1st., 1930. Upon receipt of an appeal from Motza requesting the Canadian Zionist Organization to assign the amount necessary to build a house for the staff of the Motza Convalescent Home, $6,000 was cabled to the Kupat Cholim, which is in charge of the supervision of the various institutions of this description in Palestine. The chairman explained that due to the recent disturbances in Palestine, all houses of the Motza colony had been burnt, with the exception of the Sanatorium, thus forcing the staff to live in wooden barracks, exposed to constant danger. I. Montagu Israels, of Winnipeg, was appointed to the directorship of the Zionist office in that city. Dr. B. Weinert, one of the best known representatives of the Jewish National Fund in Europe is to visit Canada at the beginning of November to spend several months here, the Jewish National Fund. Dominion Hadassah has inscribed in the Golden Book, the name of Miss Anne S. Lerner, who previous to her departure to England, was in charge of the Press Bureau of the Zionist Organization of Canada. Miss Lerner has joined the staff of the Jewish National Fund office in London, where she is directing publicity and press work. The National Council of the Zionist Organization of Canada has honoured Joseph Fineberg, its treasurer, by the inscription of the name of his son, Lewis Fineberg, on the occasion of the latter's bar-mitzvah. For the Palestine Emergency Relief Fund, $130,000 has been collected. Mrs. A. J. Freiman, Dominion Chairman of the Emergency Relief Fund, conducted the campaign. A. Levin, Dominion treasurer, helped direct the financial part and H. M. Caiserman, Dominion secretary, worked with him. A. Levin expressed his thanks to the Montreal Chairman of the campaign, J. Kellert, to Harry Batshaw, local secretary; and to Miss Sara Feen, who had directed the work of the Emergency Relief office. Canadian Hadassah has started on the "Palestine Fair," proceeds, of which are forwarded to the Canadian Hadassah Agricultural School for Girls at Nahalal, this institution having been erected and supported at the expense of the Dominion Hadassah. It is pledged to redeem 50,000 dunams of land in the Plain of Sharon, and will help to repair the destruction resulting from the recent events in Palestine.

Would you drink milk for Health?

Health is priceless. . . it cannot be valued in money. Yet if many people would spend just a few more cents a day for milk they would enjoy better health. A grown-up person should drink at least a pint a day; a child should drink at least a quart.
So many brilliant doctors recommend this simple rule. It surely should be worth a trial.
What milk?
In most places where milk is served "for health's sake" you will find City Dairy Milk Pure, Clean, Rich always. You know exactly what you are getting.

TORONTO FEDERATION FOR COMMUNITY SERVICE

A total number of cases 20,489, equal to the population of some fair-sized Ontario cities, were last year benefitted directly and indirectly by the thirty-four non-sectarian welfare agencies in the Federation for Community Service of Toronto, according to data compiled by that organization.

These figures translated into helpless and dependent children, broken or distressed families, harassed mothers and sick and aged people represent a great achievement in charitable and philanthropic effort. They give some idea, though naturally in a very abstract way of the tireless and kindly efforts which these welfare agencies carry on throughout the year for the needy and unfortunate.

Federation on behalf of these organizations, is making its annual appeal for $500,000 during the week of Nov. 4. This is the minimum sum required, it is pointed out, to make possible this extensive welfare service for another twelve months.

The campaign organization this year is headed by some of Toronto's busiest and best known men. Sir William Mulock, Chief Justice of Ontario is honorary chairman; Mr. C. L. Burton, active chairman, Mr. W. H. Hall, vice-chairman, J. H. Gundy, honorary treasurer, E. J. Howson, treasurer and W. Watson Evans chairman special subscriptions committee. Headquarters of the appeal will be at the King Edward Hotel and all who desire to support this worthy cause may send subscriptions to Mr. J. H. Gundy at that place.

The Rise of David Levinsky

A Novel by Abraham Cahan

By arrangement with* HARPER and BROTHERS, *Copyright.

"Oh, it's all nonsense, Mr. Levinsky. All this fussy stuff does not come up to one spoon of my wife's cabbage soup."

Once he said: "Do you really like champagne? I don't You may say I am a common, ignorant fellow, but to me it doesn't come up to the bread cider mother used to make. Honest." And he gave a chuckle.

I knew a man who bought a thousand-dollar fur coat and a full-dress suit before he had learned to use a handkerchief. He always had one in his pocket, but he would handle it gingerly, as if he had not the heart to soil it, and then he would carefully fold it again. The effect money had on this man was of quite another nature than it was in the case of the bricklayer. It had made him boisterously arrogant, blusteringly disdainful of his intellectual superiors, and brazenly foul-mouthed. It was as though he was shouting: "I don't have to fear or respect anybody now! I have got a lot of money. I can do as I damn please." More than one pure man became dissolute in the riot of easily gotten wealth. A real-estate speculator once hinted to me, in a fit of drunken confidence, that his wife, hitherto a good woman and a simple home body, had gone astray through the new vistas of life that had suddenly been flung open to her. One fellow who was naturally truthful was rapidly becoming a liar through the practice of exaggerating his profits and expenditures. There was an abundance of side-splitting comedy in the things I saw about me, but there was no dearth of pathos, either. One day, as I entered a certain high-class restaurant on Broadway, I saw at one of the tables a man who looked strikingly familiar to me, but whom I was at first unable to locate. Presently I recognized him. Three or four years before he had peddled apples among the employees of my cloak-shop. He had been literally in tatters. That was why I was now slow to connect his former image with his present surroundings. I had heard of his windfall. He had had a job as watchman at houses in process of construction. While there he had noticed things, overheard conversations, put two and two together, and finally made fifty thousand dollars in a few months as a real-estate broker.

We were furtively eying each other. Finally uor eyes met. He greeted me with respectful nod and then his face broke into a good-humored smile. He moved over to my table and told me his story in detail. He spoke in brief pithy sentences, revealing a remarkable understanding of the world. In conclusion he said, with a sigh:

"But what is the good of it all? The Upper One has blessed me with one hand, but He has punished me with the other."

It apeared that his wife had died, in Austria, just when she was about to come to join him and he was preparing to surprise her with what, to her would have been a palatial apartment.

"For six years I tried to bring her over, but could not manage it," he said simply. "I barely made enough to feed one mouth. When good luck came at last, she died. She was a good woman, but I never gave her a day's happiness. For eighteen years she shared my poverty. And now, that there is something better to share, she is gone."

175 OSSINGTON AVE

of real-estate speculation was Max Margolis, Dora's husband. I had heard his name in connection with some deals, and one afternoon in February we found ourselves side by side in a crowd of other "boomers." The scene was the corner of Fifth Avenue and One Hundred and Sixteenth Street, two blocks from Tevkin's residence, a spot that usually swarmed with Yiddish-speaking real-estate speculators in those days. It was a gesticulating, jabbering, whispering, excited throng, resembling the crowd of curb-brokers on Broad Street. Hence the nickname "The Curb" by which that corner was getting to be known.

I was talking to Tevkin when somebody slapped me on the back.

"Hello, Levinsky! Hello!"

"Margolis!"

His face had the florid hue of worn, nervous middle age.

"I heard you were buying. Is it true? Well, how goes it, great man?"

"How have you been?"

"Can't kick. Of course, compared to a big fellow like David Levinsky, I am a fly."

I excused myself to Tevkin and took Margolis to the quieter side of the Avenue.

"Glad to see you, my word," he said. "Well, let bygones be bygones. It's about time we forgot it all."

"There is nothing to forget."

"Honest?"

"Honest! Is that idiotic notion still sticking in your brain?"

"Why no. Not at all. May I not live till to-morrow if it does. You are not angry at me, are you? Come now, say that you are not."

I smiled and shrugged my shoulders.

"Well, shake hands, then."

We did and he offered to sell me a "parcel." As I did not care for it, he went on to talk of the real-estate market in general. There was a restaurant on that side of the block—The Curb Café we used to call it—so we went in, ordered something, and he continued to talk. He was plainly striving to sound me, in the hope of "hanging on" to some of my deals. Of a sudden he said:

"Say, you must think I'm still jealous? May I not live till to-morrow if I am." And to prove that he was not he added: "Come, Levinsky, come up to the house and let's be friends again, as we used to be. I have always wished you well." He gave me his address. "Will you come?"

Some day."

"You aren't still angry at Dora, are you?"

"Why, no. But then she may be still angry at me," I said, indifferently.

"Nonsense. Perhaps it is beneath your dignity to call on small people like us. Come, forget that you are a great capitalist and let us all spend an evening together as we used to."

Was he ready to suppress his jealousy for the prospect of getting under my financial wing? The answer to this question came to me through a most unexpected channel.

The next morning, when I came to my Fifth Avenue office (it was some eighty blocks—about four miles—downtown from "The Curb" section of Fifth Avenue), I found Dora waiting for me. I recognized her the moment I entered the waiting-room on my office floor. Her hair was almost white and she had grown rather fleshy, but her face had not changed. She wore a large, becoming hat and was quite neatly dressed generally.

The blood surged to my face. Her presence was a bewildering surprise to me.

There were three other people in the room and I had to be on my guard.

"How are you?" I said, rushing over to her.

She stood up and we shook hands. I took her into my private office through my private corridor.

"Dora! Well, well!" I murmured in a delirium of embarrassment.

"I have come to tell you not to mind Margolis and not to call at the house," she said, gravely, looking me full in the face. "It would be awful if you did. He is out of his mind. He is—"

"Wait a minute, Dora," I interrupted her. "There'll be plenty of time to talk of that. First tell me something about yourself. How have you been? How are the children?"

She was like an old song that had once held me under its sway, but which now appealed to me as a memory only. I was conscious of my consuming passion for Anna. Dora interested and annoyed me at once.

I treated her as a dear old friend. She, however, persisted in wearing a mask of politeness, as if she had come strictly on business and there had never been any other relations between us.

"Everybody is all right, thank you," she answered.

"Is Lucy married?"

"Oh, she has a beautiful little girl of two years. But I do want to tell you about Margolis. The man is simply crazy, and I want to warn you not to take him seriously. Above all, don't let him take you up to the house. Not for anything in the world. That's what brings me here this morning."

"Why? What's the trouble?"

"Oh, it would take too long to tell," she answered. "And it isn't important, either. The main thing is that you should not let him get into business relations with you, or in any other kind of relations, for that matter."

Her English was a striking improvement upon what it had been sixteen years before. As we continued to talk it became evident to me that she was a well-read, well-informed woman. I made some efforts to break her reserve, but they failed. Nor, indeed, was I over-anxious to have them succeed. She did speak of her husband's jealousy, however (though she dropped her glance and slurred over the word as she did so); and from what she said, as well as by reading between the lines of her statement, I gathered a fairly clear picture of the situation.

Board to Decide Wages

The Minimum Wage Board of the Province of Quebec, of which Gus Franck is chairman, will soon issue an order setting the wages for female workers in the wearing apparel factories in the Province.

A meeting was held at the Mount Royal Hotel at the invitation of the Canadian Association of Garment Manufacturers, Ottawa, C. N. Sommer, president of the association, was in the chair.

The clothing industry in Canada is one of the largest manufacturing industries the Dominion has. The payroll in the province of Quebec alone is over $16,000,000 a year. At the meeting, a committee was appointed to confer consisting of Horace R. Cohen, Harry Hereford, J. Gross, H. L. Sourkes and others. The employes of the different garment manufacturing companies will also be represented.

Echoes of Max's old jealousy would still make themselves felt in his domestic life. A clash, an irritation, would sometimes bring my name to his lips. He still, sometimes, tortured her with question concerning our relations.

"I never answer these questions of his," she said, her eyes on my office rug. "Not a word. I just let him talk. But sometimes I feel like putting an end to my life," she concluded, with a smile.

I listened with expressions of surprise and sympathy and with a feeling of compunction. A thought was sluggishly trailing through my mind: "Does she still care for me?"

Margolis had built up some sort of auction business, but his real-estate mania had ruined it and eaten up all he had except three thousand dollars, which Dora had contrived to save from the wreck. With this she had bought a cigar-and stationery store on Washington Heights by means of which she now supported the family. He spent his days and evenings hanging around real-estate haunts as a penniless drunkard does around liquor-shops. He was always importuning Dora for "a couple of hundred dollars" for a "sure thing." This was often the cause of an altercation. Quarrels had, in fact, never been such a frequent occurrence in the house as they had been since he lost his money in real estate, and one of his favorite thrusts in the course of these brawls was to allude to me.

"If Levinsky asked you for money you would not refuse him, would you?" he would taunt her.

Now, that he had met me at "The Curb," he had taken it into his head that his jealousy had worn off long since and that he had the best of feelings for me. His heart was set upon regaining my friendship. He had spoken to her of our meeting as a "predestined thing" that was to result in my "letting him in" on some of my deals. Dora, however, felt sure that a renewal of our acquaintance would only rekindle the worst forms of his jealousy and make life impossible for her. She dreaded to imagine it.

We spoke of Lucy again. It was so stirring to think of her as a mother. Dora told me that Lucy's husband was in the jewelry business and quite well-to-do.

She rose to go. I escorted her, continuing to question her about Lucy, Dannie her husband. It would have been natural for me to take her out by way of my private little corridor, but I preferred to pilot her through my luxurious show-rooms. We found two customers there to whom some of my office men and a designer were showing our "line." I greeted the customers, and, turning to Dora again, I asked her to finish an interrupted remark. We paused by one of the windows. What she was saying about Lucy was beginning to puzzle me. She did not seem to be pleased with her daughter's marriage.

"She has three servants and a machine," she said, with a peculiar smile. "She wanted it and she got what she wanted."

"Why?" I said, perplexed.

"Everything is all right," she answered, with another smile.

We spoke in an undertone, so that nobody could overhear us. The fact, however, that we were no longer alone had the effect of relieving our constraint. Dora unbent somewhat. A certain note of intimacy that had been lacking in our talk while we were by ourselves stole into it now that we were in the presence of other people.

HOW TO EAT

We are very often told how to eat and how important it is that our meals consist of a variety of foods. The proper selection of foods is the first item to be considered, and the next is to eat food in the right way after it has been selected. The following suggestions are made to cover the important subject of How To Eat.

Moderation should be practised at all times. It is harmful to overeat, even of the proper foods. Excess does harm; it throws an unreasonable strain on the body and so tends to wear it out early. Premature old age is the common result of neglect of the watchword, "moderation."

Meals should be eaten in a quiet, restful manner. Food is not readily digested when the body is tired, or when the individual is worried or angry. A rest before meals is recommended to overcome body fatigue. Arguments or scoldings should never be carried on at meal-time. Active exercise should not be taken immediately after eating. Exercise is needed by the body, but so is rest, and one of the times when comparative rest is required by the body is after eating.

This same idea of rest is the reason why meals should be eaten regularly. The number of meals and the hour is a matter of individual preference and custom. When meals are eaten irregularly, or when food is taken between meals, the digestive system is not given the periods of rest which it requires if it is to do its work properly. Eating between meals should be avoided. The person who requires extra nourishment should take it regularly.

Nature has provided means for the mastication of food. Food should be eaten slowly and it should be thoroughly chewed before it is swallowed. It should not be washed down with a drink before it is masticated. There is no objection to the use of beverages in moderation with meals, but they should be taken when the mouth is empty.

Moderation at all times!— that is How To Eat!

NORTHERN ONTARIO CANADA

Northern Ontario, now open for settlement at fifty cents per acre contains millions of acres of the finest agricultural land in the world. Its resources in lumber, minerals, water power, fish, game and scenery are immense. The land calls for men to cultivate it, and in return will give health, comfort and prosperity.

What settlers say of the soil, climate, farming, and forest life, is told in a most attractive booklet issued under the direction of the Honourable John S. Martin, Minister of Agriculture for Ontario. Full instructions in regards to acquiring a title to these rich agricultural lands are also given.

Have You Visited the Period Furniture Galleries Limited?

For this is the sort of shop you might expect to find in Rome or Paris, but it's the first in Montreal. Mrs. Kaufmann spent quite some time in Europe and returned with splendid reproductions of Period furniture. Each piece has been made and carved by hand and upholstered in hand made Needle point and Petit-Point, and include coffee tables, arm chairs, side chairs, love seats, fireside benches, sofas and footstools.

Montreal is fortunate in having this shop whose motive is to make these beautifully wrought reproductions available for the present-day home. Mrs. Kaufmann has made her shop a treasure trove for the seeker after the distinctive and the exclusive. Not all of us are privileged to see the exquisite rosewood and satinwood commode, with its French marble top and hand-tinted decorations, which was used by the tragic Marie Antoinette and which now rests in the Musée du Louvre; but it may be our good fortune not only to see but to purchase, if we please, the superbly created reproduction of it at the Period Furniture Galleries. A photograph of this Marie Antoinette reproduction will appear in the Review shortly. Or perhaps one might fancy a handsome Louis XVI canapé, upholstered in Aubusson tapestry, or a Gothic cabinet of hand-carved oak, or possibly a glowing wall panel of needlepoint tapestry or a piece of bronze or Dresden china. The shop, receiving its wares periodically in limited quantities from Europe, is quite the most unique establishment in Montreal.
